

The regeneration of the forest depends on the symbiosis of trees and fungi. This spoon contains an estimated 100 million fungus spores. Photos courtesy of ZERI Foundation/ Photographer Luis Camargo.

The regenerated forest in the Colombian Vichada, near the border with Venezuela. The savannah prior to the regeneration of the forest. Photos courtesy of ZERI Foundation/ Photographer Luis Camargo.

Tapping resin from tropical pine trees permits the distillation of turpentine which powers both diesel and gasoline combustion engines. Photos courtesy of ZERI Foundation/ Photographer Luis Camargo.

The Blue Economy